THE EVENING STAR.

WASHINGTON.

TUESDAY......July 28, 1896. CROSBY S. NOYES Editor.

THE EVENING STAR has a regular and permanent Family Circulation much more than three times as large as that of any other paper, morning or evening, published in Washington. As a News and Advertising Medium it has no competitor.

ITIn order to avoid delays, on account of personal absence, letters to THE STAR should not be addressed to any individual connected with the office, but simply to THE STAR, or to the Editorial or Business Depart-ments, according to tenor or purpose.

THE STAR BY MAIL.

The Star will be mailed to any address in this office in person or by letter or postal Persons leaving the city for any period rhould remember this. Terms: 13 cents per week; 25 cents for two weeks, or 50 cents per month. Invariably in advance. Subscribers changing their address from one Post-office to another should give the last address as well as the new one.

Mr. Bryan and the Populists.

However interesting as political maneu vering the coquetry now in progress between Mr. Bryan and the populists may be, it will count for little in the end. What does it really matter whether Mr. Bryan is fermally notified of the St. Louis perfermance or not? Is the country in doubt about any of the essential facts? Have not overtures been made in Mr. Bryan'. name and in his behalf for populistic support? And has not that support been formally tendered? The whole case is comprehended in that. The connection-the thorough sympathy-between Mr. Bryan and the populists is as clearly established as anything could be.

It is true that Mr. Bryan, informally, in an interview, has said that there are things in the St. Louis platform of which he does not approve. Those things are not specified, but it is assumed that his reference is to the proposition for government ownership of railroads and telegraph lines. But at the same time he points out that, in the main, the St. Louis platform is identical with the Chicago platform, and in mentioning that he as much as recommends to the pepulists not to be greedy-to take what they can get.

The great body of the populists, without more ado, are disposed to take this advice. In fact, they have been in a conservative mood, for them, all along. They expressly stated at the time of its presentation that the St. Louis platform did not embody all of their views about reforms they thought ought to be instituted. Their purpose was confessed. They were trying to accommodate themselves to Mr. Bryan's environ-They were anxious not to offend and drive away from him those democrats sensitive on the subject of populism in its acute form. They were guiding by the paraphrased admonition, that sufficient unto the day is the populism thereof. They decided to try first to get a President in sympathy with a part-a large part-of their programme, and then depend upon the assurance that, with so fair a start, all other things would, in time, be added thereunto.

The populists have abandoned none of their original tenets. That is expressly understood. All original rights are reserved. lists were content to devote most of They are simply accommodating themselves to the times. They are copying the politicians-becoming politicians themselves. They will put forward no more reforms than for the present there seems to be hope for. But they are still of the heart to be able before they get through to remodel the whole governmental structure.

This is the situation, and this is what will comfort Mr. Bryan in the campaign. Formal notification, or no formal notificafion, the fact remains that the populists approve of Mr. Bryan and will support him in large numbers. He is in sympathy with many of their views, and if elected President he will stand committed to the suppert of many projects leading in the direction of populistic government. People, therefore, who object to populism will be called upon to determine their action at the polls accordingly. Shall populism be permitted to get a start? Shall it be permitted to lay the foundations of any part of the edifice it advertises? If a start is made, and the future is propitious, the whole edifice, according to plans drawn and accepted, will go up. Great importance always attaches to the first step.

Gratifying.

Religious newspapers throughout the courtry seem to be much pleased with the comprehensive, accurate, and deeply-inter esting report of the Christian Endeavor convention printed in The Star. In one ease-that of the Denver Active Memberthe admiration reached an advanced stage for that publication says editorially:

"It is seldom that we attempt to publish the Active Member without using some original matter, but in this number we will devote the news columns entirely to reprinting extracts clipped from The Even-ing Star of Washington, D. C., which paper devoted a vast amount of space in its is sues of July 8 to 14 to reporting the inter national Christian Endeavor convention."

The Star's reputation for thoroughness has long been locally established. Much as the convention work may have astonished people unacquainted with The Star it did not surprise the people of Washington; they know what to expect and they are not disappointed.

The Potomac River Regatta.

There ought to be a big crowd of Washingtonians out to witness the Potomac river regatta Saturday afternoon. Local athletes are, for some reason or other, few in number, so there is ail the more reason why popular enthusiasm should be displayed. The regatta program is a good ore. Those who read it, in The Star, must have been pleased with the character and the variety of the contests in which brain and brawn, sultably combined, will play their parts. Boating as we know it here is clean sport; its irfluences are good. It develops the physical and mental man and deserves the hearty support of the community.

be entirely wasted. It should at least entitle him to be known as "colonel" for the rest of his life.

Mayor Pingree has temporarily relaxed his zeal for free potatoes in order to give Ter the chirpin' of the cricket an' the whishis attention to free silver.

Cuban Hospitals Are in Danger. It is officially announced from Havana that Captain-General Weyler will, as soon as reinforcements arrive from Spain, assume personal direction of the campaign against Antonio Maceo in the province of Pinar del Rio. "As soon as reinforcements arrive from Spain" is a noteworthy confession of Weyler's inability to cope with Cuban manhood. Within a period of twelve months Spain sent to Cuba, in addition to the troops already garrisoned on the island, 40 generals, 562 colonels, 4,768 captains and sentor lleutenants, 3,396 sublicutenants, and 112,500 non-commissioned officers and enlisted men, in company with about twenty war-munitions. "There is no war in Cuba." says Weyler "The rebels do not number more than 35,000;" declares that same truth-defying authority. Yet the captaingeneral dares not take the field against one fragment of the Cuban army until reinforcements arrive from Spain. What will happen when the reinforcements arrive may be guessed at from some of the news which the press censor at Havana sends out without any apparent compunction. The hero of this brief unvarnished tale is one Major Yglesias, who has been operating in the province of Matanzas. That valiant warrior succeeded, after several hours of fighting, in capturing and destroying a Cuban field-hospital. For that act of bravery Yglesias will undoubtedly be deccrated by a grateful sovereign. From any other service than that of Spain he would ere this have been dismissed in disgrace for the most inhuman of all the many varieties of inhumanity. When Weyler gets his reinforcements the Cubans will need to look out for their hospitals. Able-bodied Cuban soldiers, massed in sufficient force to make any kind of a fight, will have little to fear, but the wounded, helpless and comparatively unprotected revolutionists have good reason for shuddering at the fate which awaits them when the commander of Yglesias arrays himself for conquest.

Holst With His Own Petard.

Across the Atlantic comes a wail of truly British despair. English journalists have figured it cut that no matter which of the presidential candidates wins England will surely suffer. If McKinley is victorious then they look for a renaissance of high protection, with all its disadvantages to British industries. The administration of national affairs by Bryan threatens, they say, to bring about a convulsion which might shake the old world to its foundations. It is very affecting, of course, to hear the cries of our transatlantic relatives and friends, but we have troubles of our own, and our normally-sympathetic hearts are hardened when we remember that the British free trade propaganda is largely the cause of the depression and discontent that found voice in the democratic and populist platforms. Insufficiency of national income, the result of means that tickled England immensely, compelled the issue of bonds and encouraged that conservatism of capital and that general distrust which has crippled industry and manufactured tramps. It also started popular discussion of finance. The British capitalist has been intensely selfish. It is a Briton's privilege-frequently used-to growl; but the Briton should not complain at the outcome of his own labor.

The mercury moves up and down the thermometer's tube-principally up-but the force at work on the new city post-office building does not, according to the authorities in charge of that structure, vary even to the extent of one person. It is reported that today there have been employed just two hundred and twenty men; only two hundred and twenty in spite of the rapid approach of the year 1897. If the structure is not complete in 1897 then-that the truth of history be preserved-the stone-cutter will have to change the inscription on the building's front.

The populists may be right in thinking that it would be an act of kindness for them to refrain from notifying Mr. Bryan of his nomination by them, and let him go ahead with his campaign in blissful ignorance. At any rate, if they do not notify, they will run no risk of being mortified by

After all my meals I experienced a disagrecable, heavy sort of feeling and oftentimes in the morning my tongue would be coated; in fact, this would be the case for whole days at a time. I didn't put much faith in patent medicines, but had recourse to the whole category of correctives, aperients, laxatives; etc., but the relief I Tound was only temporary. Indeed, in most cases, after I had taken them for any length of time, the early officacy seemed entirely vitiated. I had so often seen in Ripans advertisements the statement 'one gives relief.' that at last it so impressed itself upon me that I decided to give them a trial.
